During the session, Mr. Bhatt focused on increasing the students' understanding of the urgent environmental challenges currently facing the world, particularly in the fragile ecosystems of the Himalayas. He explained how the Himalayan region, home to vital ecosystems and diverse communities, is experiencing profound environmental degradation due to factors such as deforestation, climate change, overexploitation of resources, and pollution.

Mr. Bhatt shared insights from his own work in environmental conservation, shedding light on the ongoing projects aimed at preserving the Himalayan ecosystem. He highlighted the importance of sustainable development practices, reforestation efforts, and the promotion of community-led initiatives that engage local populations in protecting their environment.

He also addressed the critical need for collaboration between policymakers, scientists, and local communities to devise practical solutions for environmental protection. Drawing from his experiences in grassroots activism, Mr. Bhatt emphasized the role of education and awareness in fostering a sense of responsibility among young people. He encouraged students to become active participants in environmental conservation, not only through advocacy but also by adopting sustainable habits in their daily lives.

This session served as an eye-opener for students, reinforcing the message that preserving the environment is not just a global responsibility but a personal one.
